Running on a campaign of creating a One Pomona vision and embracing servant leadership model, Tim Sandoval was elected mayor of Pomona and took office in December 2016.

Tim Sandoval and his family moved to Pomona when Tim was just nine years old. He attended Montvue Elementary, Emerson Middle School and Pomona High School, becoming its senior class speaker. He went on to higher education at Claremont McKenna College, and University of California Riverside.

After completing his education, Sandoval returned to Pomona to help others in the community access college as well. He led Pomona Valley Community Center's youth programs and then taught English at Charter Oak High School from 1999-2002.

In 2001, Sandoval became a founding member of Bright Prospect, a mentoring organization that has helped more than two thousand low-income youth become part of the first generation of their family to complete their college degrees. Sandoval served as the program director for Bright Prospect from 2002 through 2016.
